DAN PARRY-JONES inner worlds

These recent works feature Parry-Jones' vivid and evocative mixed media landscapes and cityscapes which are attracting a growing worldwide audience.

Dan is recognised for a unique process he has been developing since he started painting professionally in 2008. He combines painting, screen-printing, photography and collage, a multi-disciplinary approach that has evolved from a background in illustration and graphic design.

'Inner worlds' shows a development in the artist's style from his familiar theme of coastal scenes, often with children playing, to a more gritty urban style which expresses 21 century living. People captured in their own worlds – a girl texting, a boy skateboarding – snapshots of contemporary society.

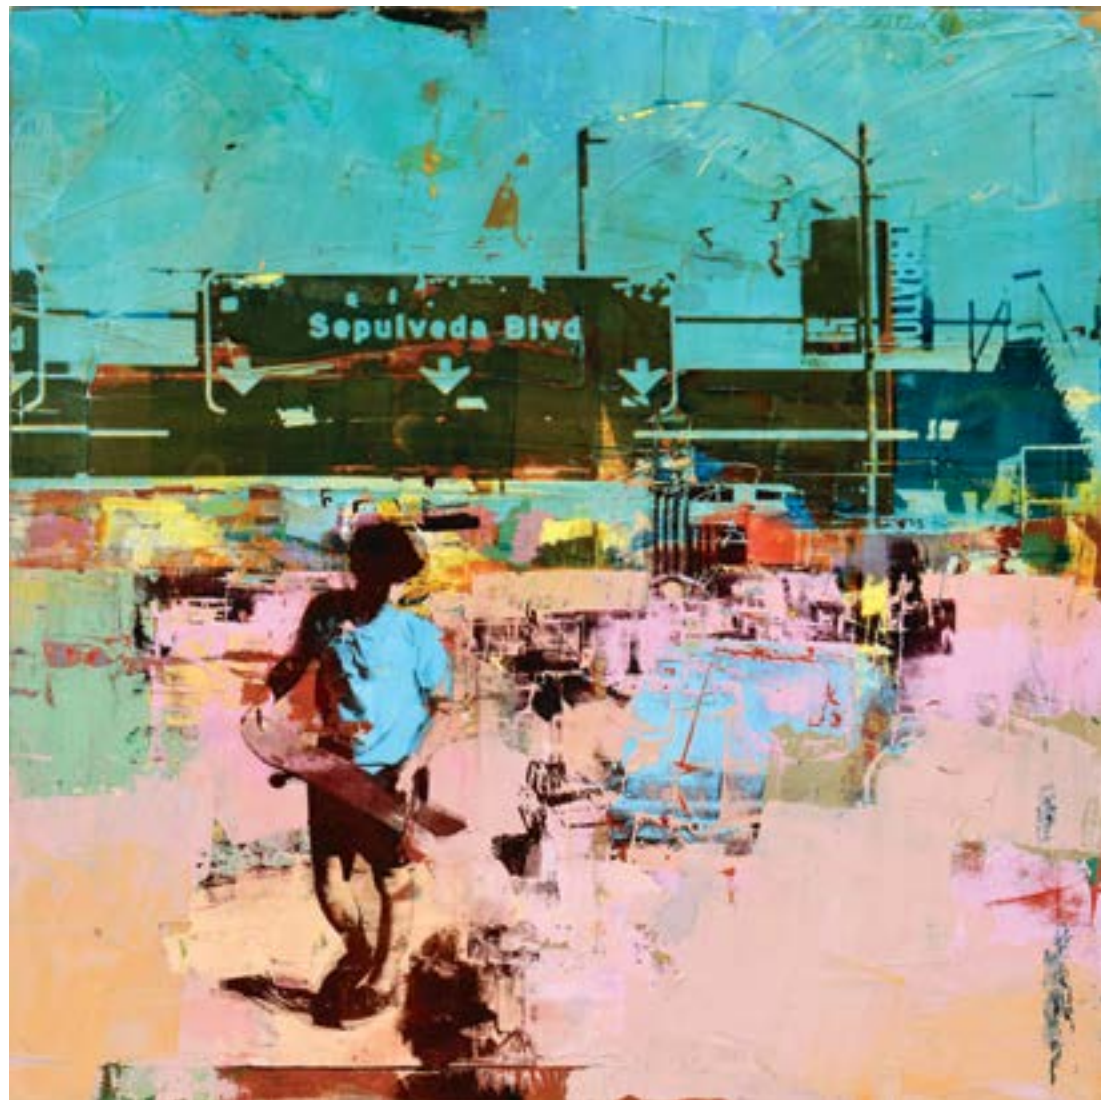

'My process is very physical which is why I work on board. I build up the paint in several layers, scraping and sanding back as I go to create more and more texture. I begin with a mental vision of the painting, the various elements appearing like film stills in my mind. But as I paint, print and collage, I invariably find myself following a new, unplanned direction. The final piece is usually nowhere near the initial vision and it is this struggle between adhering to a plan and allowing the automated side of the brain to take over and create something else that results in my best work.'

Dan Parry-Jones has exhibited widely in Europe, the US and Asia. This is his second solo exhibition with Adam Gallery.
